Mary Norton's creation of the tiny race of borrowers is an imaginative achievement in itself, but she does not stop there. She gives poignance to her tale by telling it through the voice of the boy's sister, now an old lady, who tells us at the start that her brother has long since grown up and died a 'hero's death' on the North-West frontier.

Kate begs Mrs. May to tell the story of how she first heard of the little people called borrowers from her brother. It seems that in the great big house where Mrs. May's brother was recovering from an illness, there was a very big grandfather clock, and below the clock there was a hole, home to three borrowers: little Arrietty, her mother, Homily, and her father, Pod.
